

Global Climate Action Summit —S.F. CA 9/12-14/2018

The Global Climate Action Summit came to San Francisco on the heels of President Trump’s withdrawal from the Paris Accords, but many who attended remained positive, even optimistic that the accords will continue to move forward in spite of Trump.

Yet, it’s unfortunate that our climate action course today, including the Paris Accords don’t really address the heart of our real problem, our growing numbers and our unsustainable and unjust want for more, while others struggle to live on little and are treated unjustly.

The truth is climate warming is just the tip of our ICEBERG (#ouriceberg) and unless we address ourselves as both the cause and solution we will not slow today’s rapid and unprecedented decline of life and life-sustaining capacity in 65 million years. The future health and well being of our living planet and children will surely be less because they’ll have considerably less natural (healthy) capacity from which to draw from if we fail to recognize our responsibility today.
